Arduino

Arduino is an open-source prototyping platform based on easy-to-use hardware and software. We can program the board what to do by sending a set of instructions to the microcontroller on the board.

Arduino was born at the Ivrea Interaction Design Institute as an easy tool for fast prototyping, aimed at students without a background in electronics and programming. As soon as it reached a wider community, the Arduino board started changing to adapt to new needs and challenges, differentiating its offer from simple 8-bit boards to products for IoT applications, wearable, 3D printing, and embedded environments. All Arduino boards are completely open-source, empowering users to build them independently and eventually adapt them to their particular needs. It runs on Mac, Windows, and Linux. Teachers and students use it to build low cost scientific instruments, to prove chemistry and physics principles, or to get started with programming and robotics. Designers and architects build interactive prototypes, musicians and artists use it for installations and to experiment with new musical instruments. programmers - can start tinkering just following the step by step instructions of a kit, or sharing ideas online with other members of the Arduino community.

Arduino also simplifies the process of working with microcontrollers, but it offers some advantage for teachers, students, and interested amateurs over other systems:

- Inexpensive - Arduino boards are relatively inexpensive compared to other microcontroller platforms. The least expensive version of the Arduino module can be assembled by hand, and even the pre-assembled Arduino modules cost less than $50
- Cross-platform - The Arduino Software (IDE) runs on Windows, Macintosh OSX, and Linux operating systems. Most microcontroller systems are limited to Windows.
- Simple, clear programming environment - The Arduino Software (IDE) is easy-to-use for beginners, yet flexible enough for advanced users to take advantage of as well. For teachers, it's conveniently based on the Processing programming environment, so students learning to program in that environment will be familiar with how the Arduino IDE works.
- Open source and extensible software - The Arduino software is published as open source tools, available for extension by experienced programmers. The language can be expanded through C++ libraries, and people wanting to understand the technical details can make the leap from Arduino to the AVR C programming language on which it's based. Similarly, you can add AVR-C code directly into your Arduino programs if you want to.
- Open source and extensible hardware - The plans of the Arduino boards are published under a Creative Commons license, so experienced circuit designers can make their own version of the module, extending it and improving it.
- ARDUINO 1.6.10
The open-source Arduino Software (IDE) makes it easy to write code and upload it to the board. It runs on Windows, Mac OS X, and Linux. The environment is written in Java and based on Processing and other open-source software. This software can be used with any Arduino board.

Report on Arduino workshop

Two day Arduino Uno workshop was organized on 26th and 27th August 2016. Workshop was organized to enhance the knowledge of students in latest technologies and to inculcate the habit of making projects to get the practical exposure of Electronics. To encourage the problem solving technique using latest technology through creative thinking to find solutions for variety of problems that we face in our day to day life.

Arduino is an open-source platform used for building electronics projects. Arduino consists of both a physical programmable circuit board (often referred to as a microcontroller) and a piece of software, or IDE (Integrated Development Environment) that runs on our computer, used to write and upload computer code to the physical board.

Compared to previous programmer boards, Arduino doesn't require a separate programmer to load the program. Program can be dumped using a USB cable. Additionally, the Arduino IDE uses a simplified version of C++, making it easier to learn to program.

The Uno is one of the more popular boards in the Arduino family and a great choice for beginners.

Workshop was inaugurated by our Principal Dr. B S Shrikanta with Vice Principal Dr. Anil Kumar, HoD of Computer Science Mrs E K Radhika and Resource person Mr. Sandeep Prakash, Head Technical Trainer, Embedded Destination, New Delhi.

Day one session started with the fundamentals of Arduino board followed by different kinds of Arduino boards then introduction to programming and Arduino IDE. Description about the hardware interfacing was started with different interfacing experiments with LED modules.

Second day session was the continuation of interfacing projects- interfacing DC motor and Bluetooth module. Discussion about some real time projects related to robotics with the help of videos. Students discussed about their doubts, ideas regarding various types of projects.

At the end there was a simple test to verify the understanding level of students about Arduino
